

ENGL4001 Graduation Project

“English Language Acquisition in Macau” –Professor Matthew P. Wallace

After over 10 years of English language learning, many students still struggle with English. Why does this happen? This project gives the opportunity to find answers to this question. More specifically, the project will focus on factors that influence English language proficiency of students learning English in Macau. These factors include linguistic knowledge, learner motivation, memory capacity, learning strategies, and features of assessments. The instructor will guide students in exploring these topics by designing and conducting a research project. The skills and knowledge gained from the project can solidify students' understanding of the concepts learned in the English Studies program and help prepare them for future educational opportunities.
